Rule of Law or Rule of Politic?

Obliviously Rule of Law is the only lawful rule, however the rule of law is losing power because We The People allow it to be so.

Three horrendous things happened in 1913, and yes, it was a conspiracy. And, the first two were accomplished by political power and deceit. Insurrection was committed and treason against the American people took place in each of them.

1. The Sixteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution was declared ratified, the income tax amendment. It clearly was not ratified.
2. The Seventeenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution was declared ratified. It clearly was not ratified.
3. The unconstitutional Federal Reserve Banking Act of 1913 was passed.

The income tax amendment was critical. It was needed to feed the privately owned consortium of banks called the FED. The Seventeenth Amendment was critical to remove the right of the states of the Union to equal representation in the U.S. Senate. Henceforth, those seats were up for the highest bidder.

The states are stomped on. The American people are bled to death via heavy progressive taxation and those fruits of our labor go into the coffers of an international and domestic banking cartel draining the lifeblood of this country and our people.

It was a conspiracy. A provable conspiracy: The Creature from Jekyll Island: A Second Look at the Federal Reserve by G. Edward Griffin.

Griffin's book is a factual account of the secret meetings at Jekyll Island between powerful bankers to seize and control the monetary system of our country. They were aided and abetted by rotten, corrupt Senators who got the bill pushed through. You can watch an interview with G. Edward Griffin on the "FED," here.

"This [Federal Reserve Act] establishes the most gigantic trust on earth. When the President [Wilson} signs this bill, the invisible government of the monetary power will be legalized....the worst legislative crime of the ages is perpetrated by this banking and currency bill." — Charles A. Lindbergh, Sr.

"From now on, depressions will be scientifically created." — Congressman Charles A. Lindbergh Sr.

"The financial system has been turned over to the Federal Reserve Board. That Board administers the finance system by authority of a purely profiteering group. The system is Private, conducted for the sole purpose of obtaining the greatest possible profits from the use of other people's money" — Charles A. Lindbergh Sr.

Well connected, protected thief:

Former National Security Adviser, Sandy Berger, (Clinton Administration) was caught stealing original documents from the National Archives which he destroyed. These were highly classified terrorism documents that would have exposed Bill Clinton for the failure he was — except with anything wearing skirts. Berger lied to investigators. That thief pled guilty, paid a $50,000 fine and became Marxist Hillary Clinton's key foreign policy adviser during her failed campaign for the presidency. Birds of a feather. If it were you and I, we would have gone to prison plus the fine. It pays to have friends in high places.

On May 23, 1933, Congressman, Louis T. McFadden, brought formal charges against the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve Bank system, The Comptroller of the Currency and the Secretary of United States Treasury for numerous criminal acts, including but not limited to, CONSPIRACY, FRAUD, UNLAWFUL CONVERSION, AND TREASON. Below is an excerpt; the full text is here.

"Mr. Chairman, we have in this Country one of the most corrupt institutions the world has ever known. I refer to the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Reserve Banks, hereinafter called the Fed. The Fed has cheated the Government of these United States and the people of the United States out of enough money to pay the Nation's debt. The depredations and iniquities of the Fed has cost enough money to pay the National debt several times over.

"This evil institution has impoverished and ruined the people of these United States, has bankrupted itself, and has practically bankrupted our Government. It has done this through the defects of the law under which it operates, through the maladministration of that law by the Fed and through the corrupt practices of the moneyed vultures who control it.

"Some people who think that the Federal Reserve Banks United States Government institutions. They are private monopolies which prey upon the people of these United States for the benefit of themselves and their foreign customers; foreign and domestic speculators and swindlers; and rich and predatory money lender. In that dark crew of financial pirates there are those who would cut a man's throat to get a dollar out of his pocket; there are those who send money into states to buy votes to control our legislatures; there are those who maintain International propaganda for the purpose of deceiving us into granting of new concessions which will permit them to cover up their past misdeeds and set again in motion their gigantic train of crime.

"These twelve private credit monopolies were deceitfully and disloyally foisted upon this Country by the bankers who came here from Europe and repaid us our hospitality by undermining our American institutions. Those bankers took money out of this Country to finance Japan in a war against Russia. They created a reign of terror in Russia with our money in order to help that war along. They instigated the separate peace between Germany and Russia, and thus drove a wedge between the allies in World War.

"They financed Trotsky's passage from New York to Russia so that he might assist in the destruction of the Russian Empire. They fomented and instigated the Russian Revolution, and placed a large fund of American dollars at Trotsky's disposal in one of their branch banks in Sweden so that through him Russian homes might be thoroughly broken up and Russian children flung far and wide from their natural protectors. They have since begun breaking up of American homes and the dispersal of American children. "Mr. Chairman, there should be no partisanship in matters concerning banking and currency affairs in this Country, and I do not speak with any.

"In 1912 the National Monetary Association, under the chairmanship of the late Senator Nelson W. Aldrich, made a report and presented a vicious bill called the National Reserve Association bill. This bill is usually spoken of as the Aldrich bill. Senator Aldrich did not write the Aldrich bill. He was the tool, if not the accomplice, of the European bankers who for nearly twenty years had been scheming to set up a central bank in this Country and who in 1912 has spent and were continuing to spend vast sums of money to accomplish their purpose.

"We were opposed to the Aldrich plan for a central bank. The men who rule the Democratic Party then promised the people that if they were returned to power there would be no central bank established here while they held the reigns of government. Thirteen months later that promise was broken, and the Wilson administration, under the tutelage of those sinister Wall Street figures who stood behind Colonel House, established here in our free Country the worm—eaten monarchical institution of the "King's Bank" to control us from the top downward, and from the cradle to the grave."

How long are we the people of these United States of America going to allow these great political lies to continue? Are we afraid that if the truth were to be known that this great nation would fall apart? Do we mistakenly think that we have to keep the lie going in order to keep the country solvent? I suppose that if we are this weak-minded, we deserve what we get.

But caution is advised! Four or five dollar per gallon auto fuel is just the beginning. Seems to me that we are a people that are slowly being reduced to the standards of third world countries. Countries where infrastructures are broken down, where telephone service is poor if it exists at all, not to mention other services that we won't be able to afford. Life will be substandard to what it was in the 1980's & 90's.

A few of the people will pay three-fourths or more of their wages in taxes. Already, we are paying close to half of our income to the government in one way or another; that is if we are working. A vast number of us don't work, we just feed off the labor of those who do. How long will this last? Inflation has been underway for several years, and the momentums are just now building.

Those who own the FED don't care. As a matter of fact, the owners of the FED will profit from all this, and if not, they will just start another war. War is great profit for the FED, it always has been, and it always will be.

Keep saying to yourself that everything will work out. Keep telling yourself that Social Security and your 401K will be all that you need. See how you get by on Social Security when inflation is around three or four hundred percent per month, and your tiny little check from SS is seldom increased or adjusted for inflation more than once per year. Don't worry, be happy!

But you know what? If you are an American Citizen, then it is your fault, because you are the government and for the past 100 years you have watched as the FED has ripped you off, but you didn't know because you didn't want to know.

The problem is that you wanted your cake and you wanted to eat it, too. Well, you had better spit it out and go to work changing things. You better be raising hell with your Congressmen, with your President, with your Supreme Court Justices and all the Judges that have been politically appointed. You better hold your local public officials feet to the fire of truth. AND, the truth is that all of them have sworn to uphold and defend the Constitutions of the State and the Constitution of the United States of America. If they violate that sacred oath, then they are committing insurrection and treason to the American People. You are responsible to make sure that they are taken out of office in accordance with the Constitution and sent on their way. No more BS! Only truth.

Here is a little tidbit of truth for you. What makes our US Dollar have any value at all? I'll tell you. Paying back a loan and the interest on the loan—this gives it value. When you take dollars to the bank for payment of a loan that represents your sweat, work, sales and production, that and only that gives the dollar real value. It may be hard to believe and even harder to understand, but it's true. The work you do to repay the loan and the interest you pay on the loan gives that money real value. When borrowed, the money it was only paper printed with ink, worth less than a penny a bill. But your work, your sweat, the products that you produced from your effort gives that money that you repay real value. Only then does it have real value. Of course, you kept some of the money and spent it on groceries, housing and cars. You should have because you worked for it. Theses things have value, too, but only because of your sweat, work, produce and sales. This little scheme of the FED works, but not so good for you. Once you have earned money and invested some of it in land or a business and borrowed against some of these things. Along comes the FED and makes the money supply scarce, and you can't make your payment, then the banks foreclose and you're left holding the bag. Many banks have gone under for the very same reasons, but they were not the banks that are really represented by the FED.

They are the same as you. Their owner invested in a bank when the money supply was abundant and made loans to others. Then when the FED caused the money supply to become scarce, they went under because those who borrowed money couldn't make their payments. Who do you suppose came out of that deal ahead? The FED? Don't forget the usury scam of plastic credit cards! The big banks are sucking sweat and blood from millions of Americans with plastic credit cards. You can bet that to be correct!

Think about it! A few rich bankers have duped us for almost one hundred years. We handed them over the controls to make themselves rich with gold, silver and power, and all of it at our expense. Is that stupid, or what? Isn't it time for a change?

To right and repair our monetary system will take a miracle of Biblical proportions. But, Almighty God has the ability to change things overnight. Miracles have never been the slightest of a challenge for Him. I pray that we the people of America will fall on our knees, turn from our wicked ways and submit to His sovereignty. Then God will heal our land.

God Almighty is seldom recognized in this day and age. This must be one of the first things to be changed—especially in America. We Christians must spread the good news of the Gospel at every opportunity. Also, we must hold the feet of those who are corrupt to the fire of truth.

The State Against Blacks

"The welfare state has done to black Americans what slavery couldn't do. . . . And that is to destroy the black family."
By JASON L. RILEY

"Sometimes I sarcastically, perhaps cynically, say that I'm glad that I received virtually all of my education before it became fashionable for white people to like black people," writes Walter Williams in his new autobiography, Up from the Projects. "By that, I mean that I encountered back then a more honest assessment of my strengths and weaknesses. Professors didn't hesitate to criticize me—sometimes to the point of saying, "That's nonsense."

Mr. Williams, an economist at George Mason University, is contrasting being black and poor in the 1940s and '50s with today's experience. It's a theme that permeates his short, bracing volume of reminiscence, and it's where we began our conversation on a recent morning at his home in suburban Philadelphia.

"We lived in the Richard Allen housing projects in Philadelphia," says Mr. Williams. "My father deserted us when I was three, and my sister was two. But, we were the only kids who didn't have a mother and father in the house. These were poor black people and a few whites living in a housing project, and it was unusual not to have a mother and father in the house. Today, in the same projects, it would be rare to have a mother and father in the house."

Even in the antebellum era, when slaves often weren't permitted to wed, most black children lived with a biological mother and father. During Reconstruction and up until the 1940s, 75% to 85% of black children lived in two-parent families. Today, more than 70% of black children are born to single women. "The welfare state has done to black Americans what slavery couldn't do, what Jim Crow couldn't do, what the harshest racism couldn't do," Mr. Williams says. "And that is to destroy the black family."

Government programs and regulations are favorite butts of the professor, who is best known today for his weekly column —started in 1977 and now appearing in more than 140 newspapers—and for his stints guest-hosting Rush Limbaugh's popular radio program. Libertarianism is currently in vogue, thanks to the election of a statist president and the subsequent rise of the tea party movement. But Walter Williams was a libertarian before it was cool. And like other prominent right-of-center blacks—Clarence Thomas, Thomas Sowell, Shelby Steele—his intellectual odyssey began on the political left.

"I was more than anything a radical," says Mr. Williams. "I was more sympathetic to Malcolm X than Martin Luther King because Malcolm X was more of a radical who was willing to confront discrimination in ways that I thought it should be confronted including perhaps the use of violence.

"But I really just wanted to be left alone. I thought some laws, like minimum-wage laws, helped poor people and poor, black people and protected workers from exploitation. I thought they were a good thing until I was pressed by professors to look at the evidence."

During his junior year at California State College in Los Angeles, Mr. Williams switched his major from sociology to economics after reading W.E.B. Du Bois's "Black Reconstruction in America," a Marxist take on the South's transformation after the Civil War that will never be confused with "The Wealth of Nations." Even so, the book taught him that "black people cannot make great progress until they understand the economic system, and until they know something about economics."

He earned his doctorate in 1972 from UCLA, which had one of the top economics departments in the country, and he says he "probably became a libertarian through exposure to tough-mined professors"—James Buchanan, Armen Alchian, Milton Friedman—"who encouraged me to think with my brain instead of my heart. I learned that you have to evaluate the effects of public policy as opposed to intentions."

Mr. Williams distinguished himself in the mid-1970s through his research on the effects of the Davis-Bacon Act of 1931—which got the government involved in setting wage levels—and on the impact of minimum-wage law on youth and minority unemployment. He concluded that minimum wages caused high rates of teenage unemployment, particularly among minority teenagers. His research also showed that Davis-Bacon, which requires high prevailing (read: union) wages on federally financed or assisted construction projects, was the product of lawmakers with explicitly racist motivations.

One of Congress's goals at the time was to stop black laborers from displacing whites by working for less money. Missouri Rep. John Cochran said that he had "received numerous complaints in recent months about Southern contractors employing low-paid colored mechanics." And Alabama Rep. Clayton Allgood fretted about contractors with "cheap colored labor . . . of the sort that is in competition with white labor throughout the country."

Today just 17% of construction workers are unionized, but Democratic politicians, in deference to the AFL-CIO, have kept Davis-Bacon in place to protect them. Because most black construction workers aren't union members, however, the law has the effect of freezing them out of jobs. It also serves to significantly increase the costs of government projects, since there are fewer contractors to bid on them than there would be without Davis-Bacon.

Analysis of this issue launched Mr. Williams's career as a public intellectual, and in 1982 he published his first book, "The State Against Blacks," arguing that laws regulating economic activity are far larger impediments to black progress than racial bigotry and discrimination. Nearly 30 years later, he stands by that premise.

"Racial discrimination is not the problem of black people that it used to be" in his youth, says Mr. Williams. "Today, I doubt you could find any significant problem that blacks face that is caused by racial discrimination. The 70% illegitimacy rate is a devastating problem, but it doesn't have a damn thing to do with racism. The fact that in some areas black people are huddled in their homes at night, sometimes serving meals on the floor so they don't get hit by a stray bullet—that's not because the Klan is riding through the neighborhood."

Over the decades, Mr. Williams's writings have sought to highlight "the moral superiority of individual liberty and free markets," as he puts it. "I try to write so that economics is understandable to the ordinary person without an economics background." His motivation? "I think it's important for people to understand the ideas of scarcity and decision-making in everyday life so that they won't be ripped off by politicians," he says. "Politicians exploit economic illiteracy."

Which is why, he adds, the tea party movement is a positive development in our politics and long overdue. "For the first time in my lifetime—and I'm approaching 75 years old—you hear Americans debating about the U.S. Constitution," he says. "You hear them saying 'This is unconstitutional' or 'We need limits on government' —things that I haven't heard before. I've been arguing them for years, but now there's widespread acceptance of the idea that we need to limit the government."

Still, he's concerned about how far the country has strayed from the type of limited government envisioned by the Founding Fathers. "In 1794, Congress appropriated $15,000 to help some French refugees," he says. In objection, "James Madison stood on the House floor and said he could not take to lay his finger on that article in the Constitution that allows Congress to take the money of its constituents for the purposes of benevolence. Well, if you look at the federal budget today, two-thirds to three-quarters of it is for the purposes of benevolence."

Mr. Williams says that "if there is anything good to be said about the Democratic White House and the [previous] Congress and their brazen attempt to take over the economy and control our lives, it's that the tea party movement has come out of it. But we have gone so far from the basic constitutional principles that made us a great country that it's a question of whether we can get back."

The place to start, says Mr. Williams by way of advice to the new Republican House, is on the spending side of the federal ledger. "We need a constitutional amendment that limits the amount of money the government can spend," he says. "Let's say 18% of GDP to start. The benefit of a spending limitation amendment is that you're going to force Congress to trade off against the various spending constituencies. Somebody says, 'I want you to spend $10 billion on this,' and the congressman can respond, 'My hands are tied, so you have to show me where I can cut $10 billion first.'

Mr. Williams says he hopes that the tea party has staying power, but "liberty and limited government is the unusual state of human affairs. The normal state throughout mankind's history is for him to be subject to arbitrary abuse and control by government."

He adds: "A historian writing 100 or 200 years from now might well say, 'You know, there was this little historical curiosity that existed for maybe 200 years, where people were free from arbitrary abuse and control by government and where there was a large measure of respect for private property rights. But then it went back to the normal state of affairs.'"

Hoping to end our conversation on a sunnier note, I pose a final question about race. "A Man of Letters," Thomas Sowell's fabulous book of correspondence, includes a letter the Stanford economist sent in 2006 to Mr. Williams, whom he's known for four decades. "Back in the early years," writes Mr. Sowell, "you and I were pretty pessimistic as to whether what we were writing would make an impact—especially since the two of us seemed to be the only ones saying what we were saying. Today at least we know that there are lots of other blacks writing and saying similar things . . . and many of them are sufficiently younger that we know there will be good people carrying on the fight after we are gone."

Asked if he shares his friend's optimism, Mr. Williams responds that he does. "You find more and more black people—not enough in my opinion but more and more—questioning the status quo," he says.

"When I fill in for Rush, I get emails from blacks who say they agree with what I'm saying. And, there are a lot of white people questioning ideas on race, too. There's less white guilt out there. It's progress."

The Cos Cause

“They're standing on the corner, and they can't speak English. I can't even talk the way these people talk: Why you ain't, Where you is, What he drive, Where he stay, Where he work, Who you be... And I blamed the kid until I heard the mother talk. And, then I heard the father talk.

Everybody knows it's important to speak English except these knuckleheads. You can't be a doctor with that kind of crap coming out of your mouth. In fact, you will never get any kind of job making a decent living.

People marched and were hit in the face with rocks to get an education, and now we've got these knuckleheads walking around. The lower economic people are not holding up their end in this deal. These people are not parenting. They are buying things for kids. Five hundred dollars sneakers and for what? And they won't spend two hundred dollars for Hooked on Phonics.

I am talking about these people who cry when their son is standing there in an orange suit. Where were you when he was two? Where were you when he was twelve? Where were you when he was eighteen, and how come you didn't know that he had a pistol? And where is the father? Or who is his father?

People putting their clothes on backward: Isn't that a sign of something gone wrong? People with their hats on backward, pants down around the crack, isn't that a sign of something? Or are you waiting for Jesus to pull his pants up? Isn't it a sign of something when she has her dress all the way up and got all type of needles [piercing] going through her body?

What part of Africa did this come from? We are not Africans. Those people are not Africans; they don't know a thing about Africa. With names like Shaniqua, Taliqua and Mohammed and all of that crap, and all of them are in jail.

Brown or black versus the Board of Education is no longer the white person's problem. We have got to take the neighborhood back. People used to be ashamed. Today a woman has eight children with eight different 'husbands' — or men or whatever you call them now. We have million-aire football players who cannot read. We have million-dollar basketball players who can't write two paragraphs. We as black folks have to do a better job. Someone working at Wal-Mart with seven kids, you are hurting us. We have to start holding each other to a higher standard.

We cannot blame the white people any longer.

~Bill Cosby~

On 17 May, 2004, at an NAACP event commemorating the 50th anniversary of Brown vs. Board of Education, the landmark Supreme Court decision that struck down school segregation, entertainer Bill Cosby voiced the assertions quoted above.

Dr. Bill Cosby has always been one of my heroes. If it were possible for me to have an audience with anyone that is alive or has lived in the past couple of centuries, Dr. Cosby would be in the top five. It would be so cool to spend an hour with him. Several years ago, I saw him in a casino in Las Vegas, he had a large cigar in his mouth and big smile across his face.

He is not only a funny and entertaining man, but he has a great quality about him and has done many great services for this country.

Around the House

By Barkley Doudney Schnauzer Dog

I have spent a good portion of March and some of April incarcerated in a sticking kennel just because Ashley gave birth to a new man-child. The Boss calls him VonWetzel. It seems that one of the main functions of the Boss is to be wrong, and Linda will be the first to tell you that that isn't his name and that the correct spelling is Vaughn, and that his first name is Cash and that is what he will go by. The Boss says that he is glad that they didn't make his middle name Register, then he would have to live with the name Cash Register Wetzel. Linda, the Boss, Andy, L'lana and Cayeden all made the trek from here to San Diego, California to see the latest arrival.

They are all back now, I can't express in words just how good it is to be back home where I have, at least, a limited amount of freedom and liberty. For a couple of week I was confined in a solitary cell among a bunch of howling canines.

Well, I get back home, and the Boss has nothing to say. Except to expound on a book that he read about a man and as he thinks, or something like that. The boss says that it would be good for me to consider what I allow to occupy my mind. Please! Give me a break! I'm not even a male dog much less a man!

Anyway he keeps his monolog going and I listen. After all, having human contact is great even if the human is expounding on something that I could care less about. Every time the Boss reads something new—he gets excited and that is all he wants to talk about for a week or two, then he reads something else new and different and here we go again.

The Boss keeps spouting off with phrases like; Good thoughts and actions can never produce bad results; bad thoughts and actions can never produce good results. He goes on and on; This is but saying that nothing can come from corn but corn, and nothing from nettles but nettles. I'm lying there on the floor wondering to myself; has the Boss lost his ever-loving mind? He says that everything that happens starts with a thought, and that nothing starts without first—the thought, and that only we have the ability to limit or to encourage what we think. He says that he wishes that he had read the book when he was a younger man, and that it might have changed his life. But, him being the eternal optimist says that it can change the rest of his life. He claims that every young person should think good thoughts if they want good things to happen. Well, that is the first thing he said that has made any sense to me.

All indications are that V-Dog is doing well and she is being pampered more now than ever before since she has moved the home town of the San Diego Padres. James, Ashley's husband, has taken charge and V-Dog just loves him. However, the Boss claims that V-Dog vigorously enjoyed hiking the streets of San Diego with him while he was there visiting.

Well Spring is here and the scary storms are approaching. I love springtime, but the storms are so frightening to me that I may need a canine psycho-therapist before midsummer. Those lightning flashes aren't so bad, but the thunder puts me near the edge of oblivion and fear engulfs my total being. I tell ya, I can't take much of the thunder. I know that Thunder is the after result of the lightning and that whatever damage is done is history, but I just can't take it. It makes me a trembling caricature of my real self. I just can't stand it.

Well I best close, as I am about to run out of room.

You keep your nose pointed into the wind and watch your back. I've heard of Coyotes snatching dogs like me for lunch. Later!
